

The Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 introduced a wide range of new powers to enable the police and local authorities to tackle antisocial behaviour head on. It has now been in force for almost four years and the attached statistics outline use of the Act's enforcement measures up to end-March 2008. This is the final collection and presentation of such data in this form, following the introduction of a new streamlined reporting framework under the new Concordat between central and local government.

We are currently reviewing the national antisocial behaviour strategy, including key elements of the Antisocial Behaviour (Scotland) Act 2004, to see where it can be improved. We want to put more emphasis on prevention and early intervention to nip antisocial behaviour in the bud early. Enforcement measures have their place but on their own won't deliver long term solutions. Therefore, we want to ensure that, in presenting local activity in the future, we give as much recognition to prevention and intervention work as to enforcement activity.

Consideration will be given to how and what we collect and present in terms of local activity to tackle antisocial behaviour in the future, as part of the strategy review. We would welcome practitioner views on this (please email Chrissie Finnigan at Christine.finnigan@scotland.gsi.gov.uk). We are liaising with COSLA and national officer associations to ensure that any future data collection and presentation is compatible with the new Concordat.
